Tips for the Winter Wanderer

In This Issue

Best Places for a Winter Getaway

About the RV Show

When the Christmas tree comes down and the New Year's confetti is swept away, we enter the depths of winter. That means cold weather, long nights and, for those of us with rambling souls, a growing itch to get on the road.

Well, you don't have to wait until spring to fire up the RV and take an interesting trip. California's geography offers the winter wanderer myriad options and a diversity of experiences to choose from.

For those looking for a winter wonderland, Tahoe's downy slopes beckon and Yosemite dazzles in the winter light. Want a sophisticated getaway? Paso Robles offers a first-class wine tasting experience and RV parks to match. Or maybe your rambling spirit tends to take you off the beaten path. The carpet of wildflowers and pleasant temperatures will make you wonder how Death Valley ever earned its menacing appellation.

There are plenty of options, my friends, if you want to hit the road, recharge the batteries and give your spirits a lift this winter. First, stop off next month at our 22nd Annual Manufacturers' RV Show and Sale to outfit your rig or upgrade to the latest model, then head out on the highway and scratch that itch for adventure. Here are some of my favorite spots.

Happy RVing in the New Year,

Best Places for a Winter Getaway:

- 1) 22nd Annual RV Manufacturers' Show and Sale: With a multitude of vendors looking to offer deals on everything from campground memberships and generators to fully equipped, top-of-the-line RVs, our show should be the first stop on any RVer's winter itinerary. Come see us Jan. 22-31, 2010, at the Alameda County Fairgrounds.
- 2) Camp Richardson, Lake Tahoe: This campground is located right on the shores of Lake Tahoe, and provides its campers with immediate access to fun winter activities like cross-country skiing on trails that run around the lake. With ski and snow shoe rentals available at the campground, you don't even have to come prepared to take advantage of all the outdoor amenities. Get more info about RV camping at the park here.
- 3) Yosemite National Park: Winter in Yosemite truly is a wonderland filled with breathtaking views, a multitude of outdoor activities and interesting wildlife. However, it's important to check conditions at the park before you head out. Visit the park's website to get updates on current weather conditions to make sure you're prepared.

4) Wine Country RV Park, Paso Robles: For those of you looking for a winter wine getaway, head down to Paso Robles to find out for yourself why this area is being hailed as the new hot spot for oenophiles. This park caters to RVers looking to indulge their palates and broaden their appreciation of California's vinicultural bounty.

5) Death Valley: With average temperatures of 68 degrees Fahrenheit in January and 72 in February, winter in Death Valley provides some respite from the cold and offers visitors the chance to see one of the most unique desert landscapes in the country without feeling like they're camping in a furnace. RV parks abound, as do amazing wildflowers, multicolored rock formations and stunning canyons. Temperatures start to climb in March, so it's best to get there before spring -- but in the winter months, this spicy corridor along California's border is truly an outdoor enthusiasts playground.
